Entertainments

Chansonnier flies Mariposa

TORONTO — Gilles Vigneault of Quebec, best known in this city for his role in "Sing Out," has been chosen to sing at Toronto's annual festival of folk music. The other acts at the festival will be "La Grande Asile," "Les Chansonniers," "Le Bateau," and "La Bande des Cris."

"Sing Out is an international folk music festival which takes place at the end of May," Vigneault said. "We are all interested in the growth of folk music, and we look forward to hearing each other's music."

"I am excited to be coming to Toronto," he added. "I have heard so much about the city's vibrant folk music scene, and I am looking forward to meeting the other performers."

Vigneault has been a folk singer for many years, and has performed in many festivals around the world. He is known for his powerful voice and his ability to connect with his audience.

"Sing Out," which is produced by the Canadian Folk Music Society, is a week-long festival that features over 100 performers. The festival is held in various venues throughout Toronto, including the Massey Hall and the St. Lawrence Centre for the Arts.

Vigneault's performance is one of many highlights of the festival. Other performers include "La Grande Asile," "Les Chansonniers," "Le Bateau," and "La Bande des Cris."

"Sing Out," which is produced by the Canadian Folk Music Society, is a week-long festival that features over 100 performers. The festival is held in various venues throughout Toronto, including the Massey Hall and the St. Lawrence Centre for the Arts.

The festival is a celebration of folk music, and it aims to bring people together through music. The festival offers a diverse range of performers, including traditional and contemporary folk musicians.

Vigneault's performance is one of many highlights of the festival. Other performers include "La Grande Asile," "Les Chansonniers," "Le Bateau," and "La Bande des Cris."

The festival is a celebration of folk music, and it aims to bring people together through music. The festival offers a diverse range of performers, including traditional and contemporary folk musicians.